Measurement page: Plug info and measurement on the current pants you are currently wearing. Then compare with similar brand sizes. The solution is to help simplify the way users to compare pants to pants.

There can be 2 ways to do this: measurement of the body and measurement of 1 pants to compare with another pants.

Reviews

This page shows the reviews and star ratings on a pants. These reviews and ratings come from the websites of other online shops/apps and even local stores. This helps tells users what pants fit them and if there are worth getting. It also helps speed clothes shopping in store, you can just find the right pair online by comparing your sizes. Then pick it up at the store when its ready!

Welcome screen for users to log in or create an account. This would usually only show up when the user has just downloaded the app, or has cleared their cache/cookies so they have to log in again. It can be an inconvenience to have to log in every single time you open an app.

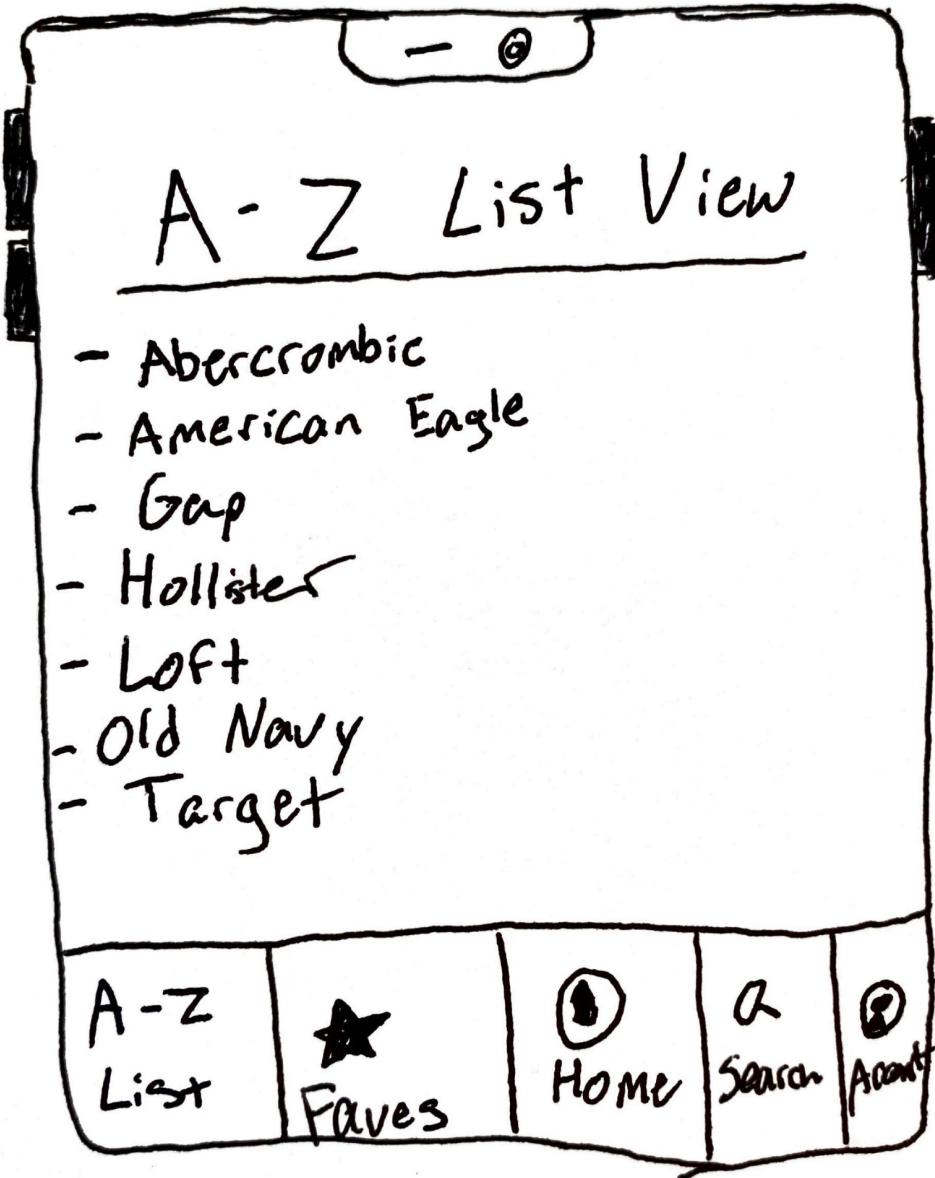

Home screen/feed. This is where users can see posts from other users including updates about sizing from brands they like! From here a user can create a post or swap between the tabs at the bottom of the screen.

The create post screen that pops up after a user selects the + button.

This page lists all the brands with data entered from A-Z. This would include most big box, popular brands that have size conversions input already. As more users add their own contributions, however, more smaller companies would join the list.

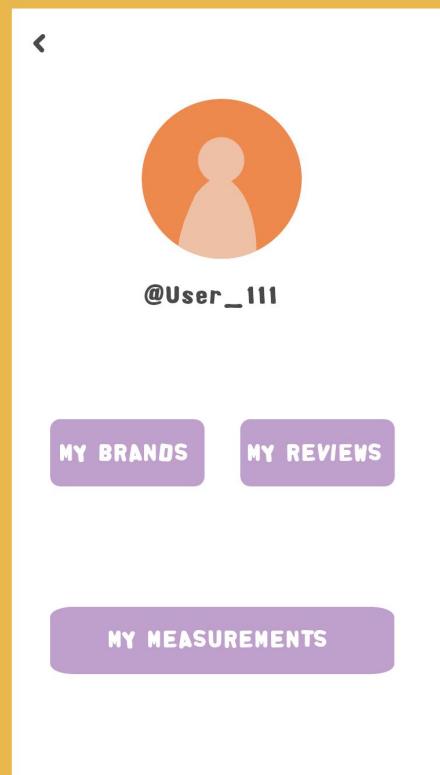

This is an example brand screen for Target, specifically the boyfriend style of jeans. Various information would be provided on this page describing how this style of jeans fit, what size you would be in this brand according to measurements you input on your profile, and then what that size of jean would be in various other brands when you click the "view" button. There are also user reviews to see real people give opinions on these jeans!

This is an example of the favorites page. Here, users can favorite specific pairs of jeans or brands that they can come back to compare, shop, or review later.

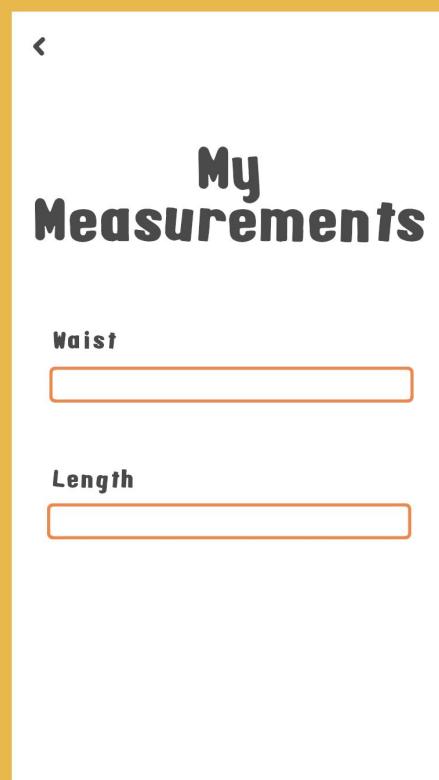

This would be the login screen for users to access their accounts

This is the user's profile. Here they can get to their sizing, reviews, and measurements
